HONGKONG, AUGUST 9, 1867.

People who contend that it is not the interest of Hongkong to exert itself on behalf of progress, in connection with the revision of the Treaties, because the ports who would benefit by progress must be rivals of this colony, take a very narrow view of the situation. They are justified, no doubt in saying that it would have been better for Hongkong, that is to say, it would have been better for the people who might have been living in Hongkong in the case supposed, if there had never been any ports opened in China at all. In no elevated sense of the words do we believe even that to be true, because it would not have been possible for this colony to have attained its present magnitude except as the centre and head-quarters of a larger trade than it could ever have carried on itself alone. Speculations of this kind are difficult and uncertain, because in saying, if so and so had happened, this or that would have been caused, one is apt to lose sight of some condition which would have modified the result very materially. People see ships going to and fro between Europe and America and the various China ports, without touching at Hongkong, and they conclude that all this trade would have been driven through the colony if the ports had never been opened. Some of it probably would have been so driven (to the inconvenience of foreign merchants, if it naturally flows in other channels), but the larger part would never have been called into existence at all. With only one port in China the trade would have remained very much what it was in the beginning, a little close preserve where a few men who had taken possession of the cover might make tremendous bags, but which could never be thought of for a moment as a fair field for a large number of sportsmen.

We are very far from saying the more ports open the better. Perhaps there may be more open now than the trade can support; certainly there are more than can be worked on the principle which has been attempted in China with such signal ill-success, the maintenance of establishments at each port by each firm. Looking back on the causes which have operated injuriously on the prosperity of foreign trade in China during the last year or two, it is impossible to leave out of the calculation the cost of the multiplied establishments which the great houses have chosen to keep up at the various ports. We have heard it stated, for instance, that the aggregate expense of all the establishments kept up by Messrs. Dent and Co. was two lakhs per annum, and without being at all sure of these figures, it is at any rate manifest that when bad seasons come round, as they must to all firms occasionally, such expenses are a terrible weight to carry. While China is regarded as one place, the whole of which must be embraced in the operations of any firm which wants to enter the trade at all, it would be nearer the truth to say the fewer, rather than the more, ports open the better. But already the system has given way to some extent; there are many firms peculiar to different ports, some of which are only established in Hongkong or Shanghai, or Foochow, and that is undoubtedly the soundest system,—the plan capable of the widest expansion, and providing for the "greatest happiness of the greatest number" much more effectually than the old arrangement, by which a few colossal firms made great fortunes. When people talk about the future prospects of the China trade, they take bright or gloomy views very much according to whether they think prosperity indicated by the magnitude of the largest half-dozen fortunes which may be made in it, or by the number of people engaged in various ways and getting on moderately well. If the houses with branches at every port become the rare exceptions, and Hongkong grows to be a cluster of firms doing business partly with Chinese, and partly with other clusters of European firms at other ports, no one will then be inclined to think that the ports are ruining the original centre of the trade. Indeed, the state of things referred to, has in a great measure come about already. The houses which ramify all over the empire and in Japan, can be counted on the fingers, but in the sympathy and regret felt for some which have ceased to exist, in the depression of spirits caused by some of the failures which have taken place, people can only see the gloomy side of the transformation, and will not readily believe in the possibility that a new order of things containing the seeds of a more popular prosperity than has yet been seen in China, may be slowly evolving itself from the temporary chaos.

Meanwhile, whether this new era is just at hand or some way off still, there can be no doubt that the oldest era of all in which one port could monopolise all the trade which was done between China and the rest of the world, is utterly gone, and can never return either for good or evil. Hongkong must share the trade with other places, and it is no use to base a policy on a regret, to say that we will do nothing towards cultivating improved relations with the Chinese, because the ports have been opened and have broken down our monopoly. They are open and cannot be shut up again, even if that were desirable, and Hongkong must look to getting on through the general improvement of trade all over the country. Whether or not it is true that if the ports had not been opened the colony would have been better off, it is at any rate certain that as the ports are open, the better off they are, the better for us too. This colony is in some measure the central office for the China trade, and as a free port, which is at the same time the first point of arrival for European news, it must always be more or less concerned with everything doing on any part of the coast. Hongkong must always be the great entrepôt of China, and the more business is done at the ports, the more goods will be drawn thence, and the more come in to supply the vacancy. Broadly, it is just as much our interest as it is that of any other community in China, to obtain improved concessions from the native Government, secure the fulfilment of previous engagements, and cultivate a policy of progress.

Police Intelligence, August 8th.

BEFORE E. W. GOODLAKE, Esq.

There was rather a thin attendance in the dock of the police court this morning, caused no doubt by the inclement weather thieves as well as police having their ardour damped by the copious showers of the previous night. The charge-sheet, however, contained the usual assortment of cases.

ASSAULT.

A very respectable-looking Chinaman who described himself as a shoemaker by trade, said had only been in the colony a few weeks, was on his way to the Chinese Theatre in Tung-ming-lane, on Wednesday evening, when he was attacked by the prisoner Wang-a-chut, and only got away by calling police, who immediately made their appearance, and succeeded in arresting the prisoner.

The P. C. corroborated this statement.

The prisoner in defence stated that he was a shoemaker, and that on Wednesday evening, while in Tung-ming lane, the complainant and a number of others rushed upon him, and demanded 10 taels in silver, as his initiation fee for joining the Shoemakers' Guild. Refusing to pay the sum they called police, and gave him in charge. James Thrash, a warder in the gaol, identified the prisoner as an old gaol-bird, who had already served a couple of terms of 12 months' each for larceny from person, and was only released about six months since.

His Worship told the prisoner that he did not believe a word of his story, and therefore sentenced him to one month's imprisonment with hard labour, and to receive 20 lashes, and he was furthermore to find sureties in $100 each for future good conduct.

LARCENY.

Lesa-poo, a young scamp about 14 or 15 years of age, on Wednesday afternoon snatched an umbrella from a man who was engaged making a purchase from a hawker, and ran away. P. C. No. 465 saw him running with the umbrella in his hand and the complainant giving chase, and accordingly seized him.

The prisoner denied the charge, stating that he had no umbrella when arrested, but was accidentally pushed against the complainant, and the latter took him, so he ran away, and was arrested by the constable. One of the gaol wardens identified the prisoner as having been in gaol before, and had been flogged once or twice. His Worship sentenced him to one month's imprisonment with hard labour, and to find two sureties in $100 each.

BASKARDED CAGES.

The two boat coolies charged with stealing a spy glass from Messrs. McEwen & Co. on Tuesday last, were again brought up this morning; the police, however, were unable to bring any further evidence or to find the glass.

His Worship, taking into consideration the evidence taken on the first hearing of the case, sentenced the second prisoner to three months' imprisonment and two weeks' solitary confinement; the first prisoner was discharged.

Tung-a-lum, the boy who was arrested on Tuesday last with a bundle of female clothing. The police succeeded in finding the owner of the clothing, a Mrs. Herbert, who deposed that on Monday night there was stolen from her room a box of clothing, of which those now in court are a portion.

The defendant being asked if he had any witnesses, called one Sun-a-in, who said that he was acquainted with the boy, but no relation, and that he (a man) gave him a bundle of clothes to take and pawn for him; he was very near to the parties and could distinctly hear what was going on. He was also the party that had gone bail for the prisoner.

The police constable corroborated his former evidence, but His Worship, doubting some of the testimony of the parties, further remanded the case until Tuesday next.

NO PASSES.

Cheong-a-sin, a villainous-looking Chinaman, charged with being out without a pass at night, and who said he was a stone-cutter and only washing himself, but which statement was denied by the constable who arrested him, was sentenced to 14 days' hard labour. His Worship also admonished him, and said that there was a robbery committed in the night, and that he hoped he was not among the thieves.

English Manners.

The "Flaneur" of the Morning Star (Edmund Yates) writes:—"The chord struck by the Pall Mall Gazette has been vibrating ever since, and has found echo in most of the leading journals. Some have touched upon the question of the urgent necessity for the return of the Queen to society; others its tone, and save it from the toils of demi-mondé-ism, with which it has recently been inoculated; while others have denied the existence of such a state of things as that proclaimed by our contemporary, and denounced the statement as too general and sweeping. We would ask these last-named writers to reason, if they are unhappily old enough to do so, the temps-passés of which we are laudatores, and to contrast it with the present time. In the language of Mr. Snagsby, 'not to put too fine a point upon it,' we would ask them to go back no further than the season before the outbreak of the Crimean war, and to picture to themselves Kensington Gardens on a band day. There were probably not half the number of people who now throng the drive and amble the end of the row, but they were infinitely better bred and infinitely better mannered. Not only in America has the influence of 'shoddy' made itself felt; there are nouveaux hommes in England who have done something equivalent to 'striking it rich,' something in boiler-making, in iron-smelting, in railroad contracting—something, in fact, which sends the ex-woollen draper or boiler maker into Parliament as Conservative member for a close borough, sends his wife into the park in a splendid barouche, and puts both sons into the Junior Carlton. Half of these good people were lamp-faced rogues at their county and till in the year '50. Then to smoke in the daylight was to stamp yourself a cad; now cloud-compelling Aldershot puffeth it where it listeth, and thus above the heads of the frequenters of the drive hang wreaths as thick as those which decorate a Dutchman's Lustgarten or a Studentenkneipe. Then ladies were treated by English gentlemen with a courtesy which had nothing in the world for its equal, nor French gesticulation, nor German stiffness, nor Italian pantomime. 'Avant tout je suis gentilhomme Anglais,' said Mr. Kinglake's hero, Lord Raglan, on a memorable occasion; but this 'General with a half-empty coat-sleeve' would scarcely, one fancies, care about what passes for the 'gentilhomme Anglais' of the present day. Then royalty was received uncovered, and with every demonstration of respect; now if one is to credit what one hears, the first gentleman in England, by his position, goes into his club, and his consorts, not troubling themselves to remove their hats, acknowledge his presence with familiar nods."

Disraeli at the Trinity House.

On the 22nd of June, the Brethren of the Trinity gave their annual dinner. After the usual loyal and patriotic toasts, the Chancellor of the Exchequer, returning thanks for "Her Majesty's Ministers," said:

Deputy Master, my Lords, and Gentlemen,—I need not assure you that Her Majesty's Ministers must be much gratified by the manner in which you have received the proposition of their healths this day, and not the less so because, as our Deputy-Master has very properly observed, on such occasions as the present their health is given, not as an appeal to party feeling on the peculiar opinions which any class of, Her Majesty's subjects may hold, but to the respect and good feeling of the great body of the people, who appreciate the efforts of the public servants of the Crown who endeavour, whatever the principles under which they work, to do their duty to their Sovereign and their country. (Cheers.) And, indeed, I can assure you that to us it cannot be much more satisfactory that you should receive such a toast in the manner you have done to-day, totally devoid of any party associations, than if it were received on some occasion when we had met together to celebrate the triumph of party, or the patronage or propagation of any particular set of political opinions. After all, it is in the respect of our well-considering fellow-subjects that we must receive our best reward for any exertions we can possibly make; and it is to the calm verdict of the unimpassioned portion of the nation that we must appeal for our best justification. (Cheers.) When Her Majesty's Government acceded to power they acceded to an inheritance of great labour and great responsibility, that under all circumstances must be the inheritance of all who undertake those duties. With regard to what we may have done, the policy of this country may, generally speaking, be divided into two heads—the management of our foreign relations and the conduct of our home Government. With regard to the management of our foreign relations, I would not allude to them unless I thought that I was echoing not only the universal opinion of all Englishmen, but of the subjects of all countries (cheers), that my noble friend near me (cheers), by his prudent and sagacious management of affairs, has secured the peace of Europe. (Loud cheers.) My noble friend is descended from a race who had something to do with the history of this country in the time of that King Henry VII. to whom the Deputy-Master has referred (cheers), and I will be bold to say that not one of his ancestors ever did a braver or finer act than that he achieved when his signed his name to the late treaty made at London and which secured the peace of Europe. (Cheers.) With regard to our domestic politics, I shrink from any allusion which may for a moment excite anything like controversy—I won't say of expression, but even of feeling. I studiously avoid it. Our Deputy-Master has referred to my humble efforts, during the session. They have been made where, quoting the words of the song last sung,

"The enemy nods do blow."

(Loud cheers and laughter.) I can say for the policy of Her Majesty's Government, in one sentence, that if with reference to foreign affairs it is a policy to maintain the peace of Europe, so with regard to our domestic affairs our policy is to secure the peace of England. (Cheers.) It is with that view that we have felt it our duty to introduce that great measure to which the Deputy-Master has referred; and all I will say of it on the present occasion is that I hope, as I believe, that it will catalyze, to the advantage of this country (cheers), that it will strengthen the State and add to the spirit of the community. (Cheers.) It is to us a matter of great satisfaction that Her Majesty's Government should be remembered on an occasion like the present, and especially in this assembly. (Cheers.) The relations of the Government of this country with the Trinity-house are of long date. For many generations their most eminent members have been numbered among the brethren of this society, and it is most satisfactory to those that they should be connected with a corporation which is identified with one of the noblest of our public services in all its branches, upon whose efforts the prosperity of our commerce mainly depends, and which by its accuracy of scientific knowledge has added so much to the security of this country. (Cheers.) I hope the connexion between Her Majesty's Government, from whatever party they may be formed, and this ancient and honourable corporation will be permanent. (Cheers.) I am convinced that if that be the case they will be bound together by associations which are connected with the highest interests of the country. (Cheers.) For my part, I remember, with pride that I am one, though one of the humblest, of your brethren (cheers)—and that I have succeeded in the office I hold some of the most eminent men who have been responsible for the administration of the country. (Cheers.) On the part of Her Majesty's Government I acknowledge with cordiality the honour you have done them; and I can assure you with sincerity that the consciousness that we possess your esteem and good wishes, whatever may be your political opinions, is the best reward we can receive for the performance of our public duties, and the highest inducement we can have to do our duty to our Sovereign and our country. (Loud cheers.)

Army Administration.

An able article on Army Reform appears in the new number of Fraser's Magazine. It is chiefly occupied with a consideration of the system on which justice is administered in the army. The question has been often ventilated, and the evils of the system are notorious; but anything like reform is so hopeless, except through the pressure of public opinion upon the military authorities, that it is worth while to keep attention fixed upon the subject. We have only to consider what an ordinary criminal court would be if constituted in the same way as a regimental court-martial to appreciate the absurdity and injustice of the latter tribunal. Conceive a court in which the office of judge is dispensed with, and three, or perhaps five, jurymen, after hearing the evidence for the prosecution laid before them by a superintendent of police, in the presence of the prisoner unaided by counsels, not only find the verdict, but pass the sentence, the only appeal being to the magistrate who had committed him for trial—neither that magistrate nor any of the members of the court having as a rule any knowledge of law or the assistance of any lawyer. Under the most favourable circumstances, it is impossible that such a tribunal could do its work satisfactorily; it could hardly avoid mistakes on one side or the other. But we must remember that the men who compose it are not only generally ignorant of law, but apt to be more or less prejudiced against the prisoner, or else eager only to get through the work as quickly as they can. "The proceedings of regimental courts-martial," says the writer in Fraser, "are generally hurried over in the most indecent manner. A captain is regarded by the subalterns of his regiment as a good or a bad President of a court-martial according to the rapidity with which he can dispose of the cases before him." No doubt courts-martial are not wilfully and consciously unjust, but their action usually appears to be that the fact of the prisoner being before them is pretty good evidence of his guilt; and that, in fact, they have been called together only to give a formal sanction to the finding which has been already come to by the commanding officer. The conduct of the commanding officers is too often such as to confirm this view—a finding which is not agreeable to him being frequently returned to the court. "We have known cases," says the writer in question, "where the commanding officer has sent for the members of a regimental court-martial, and has administered to them a personal rebuke for their finding, a sentence disregarding the oath that they were sworn to act according to their consciences in oath. And we know of one case—it has happened very recently, and for the credit of the army we hope it stands alone—where the commanding officer refused to give any leave to the officers who had come to a finding contrary to his opinion, and actually ordered them to serve on all regimental courts-martial till further notice!" Pall Mall Gazette.

The Swedenborgians are making a great many proselytes in London, and are erecting a place of worship at Camberwell at a cost of 2,000.

The Queen of Spain has abandoned her intention of being present at the coming festival in Rome. This is in consequence of indirect remonstrances addressed to the Court of Spain on behalf of the Italian Government, which was probably apprehensive lest the presence of so Catholic a potentate as Queen Isabella, and the demonstrations it was likely to excite on the part of the clerical party, might provoke the party of action to some imprudent step.—Times.

Lord Romilly and "Official Liquidators."

The condition of the business in the Court of Chancery requires an immediate increase in the staff of officers attached to the Chambers of the Master of the Rolls and the three Vice-Chancellors, and it is satisfactory to see that Lord Chelmsford has recognised this necessity. Complaints are continually reaching the public of the delay and vexation caused by the pressure of business in the Chambers of the Chancery Judges, arising principally out of the numerous Winding-up cases now before the Courts.

The discussion on the Court of Chancery (Officers) Bill, which took place last night, has elicited from Lord Romilly a suggestion which we venture to predict will not be looked upon with favour. Lord Romilly complains "that the Court has no power in choosing the persons who should act as official liquidator of a company except from the two or three persons put forward by the parties, and in many cases only one person was nominated." His Lordship proceeds to propose the insertion in the Bill of a clause making it lawful to appoint ten or twelve persons who should be appointed official liquidators, and that the official liquidator in each case should be selected from that body. Part of the reason assigned for this suggestion consists in the fact that, although security is always given by official liquidators, yet that it is often inadequate to cover the amount which passes through their hands. Now, if the gentlemen who are under existing circumstances nominated to these appointments, find it difficult to procure sufficient security for one appointment, in what manner shall we make a selected body of men provide further security than they are able to provide as individuals? Surely it is not proposed to make these ten or twelve selected liquidators responsible interchangeably for the defaults of each other. To do so would be to establish what we apprehend Lord Romilly aims at, namely, a department of official liquidators—a body of men who, in consequence of their heavy responsibilities, must be paid by permanent salary, and become entitled to compensation upon the diminution of the present pressure and consequent abolition of their office. Moreover, the Court possesses in fact the means of procuring better security for the proper performance of the duties of official liquidators than it could have in the event of their becoming permanent officers of the Court. In case of any malversation of funds the Court can now come upon the sureties, but in the proposed case of a department the Court must, in the first instance, at least, make the amount good out of its own funds, and look to the chapter of accidents to recoup itself. In making the appointment of official liquidators, it is perfectly competent to the Court to require any number of names to be proposed, and it is not limited to accepting one of the two or three presented for its acceptance.

Lord Cairns, in opposing the proposal of Lord Romilly, puts the matter in a light which cannot be overlooked; he says, that to make such appointments would be difficult, without creating vested rights, and giving rise to future claims for compensation." The present machinery for making these appointments is not only efficient, but it is, we believe, the best that can be employed. Each person appointed is required to give large security, and in fixing the amount of this the Court is not limited; he is fully amenable to the Court, which may bind him to the appointment by special rules and conditions; and he is in a measure a temporary officer of the Court, without having on the expiration of his office any further claim in the nature of compensation or otherwise.—Globe.

La Forza del Destino.

Verdi's opera of La Forza del Destino, composed for and produced at St. Petersburg five years since, was brought out for the first time in England at Her Majesty's Theatre on June 22. The opera, founded on one of those horrible stories of crime and bloodshed which alone seem to stimulate Verdi's imagination, contains much cleverly-written concerted music, although but few effective solo pieces. "The plot, according to the "argument" of the opera book, is as follows: The Marquis of Calatrava has a son, Carlos, and a daughter, Leonora. She is sought in marriage by a young noble, Don Alvaro, but it is said in dim blood runs in his veins, and the proud hidalgo rejects his suit. Leonora loves him and consents to become his bride. The marquis discovers their design and endeavours to frustrate it. A pistol in the hand of Alvaro is accidentally discharged and fatally wounds the marquis. He dies, cursing Leonora. In the ensuing confusion Alvaro is wounded and Leonora escapes. Each imagines the other dead. Leonora, stricken with remorse, and dreading her brother's vengeance, in disguise seeks a refuge in a convent amongst the clefts of Gorunchettes. Carlos, foiled in his search after his sister and his father's murderer, enters the army engaged in Italy. He is there rescued (under an assumed name) from assassins at the gaming-table, by the pride of the army, Don Frederic Herreros. They swear eternal friendship. In a victorious sortie Don Frederic is severely wounded. He requests his new friend, in the event of his death, to burn his papers. The suspicions of Carlos are aroused, and a portrait of Leonora confirms them. Don Frederic Herreros is the long-sought Don Alvaro. On his recovery, Carlos declares his name, challenges, and wounds him. Broken-hearted, Alvaro resolves to dedicate his life to heaven. He quits Italy, and takes refuge in the convent monastery in Spain, under the name of Fra Rafael. Still thirsting for revenge, his enemy pursues him. Taunts and threats are uttered in vain, till a blow awakens his fury, and they fight in a valley amidst the rocks adjoining the convent. Carlos is mortally wounded. He prays for priestly aid. The old-stabbed Alvaro dare not shrive him; he remembers the recluse, and summons him from his cell. He comes, and Alvaro recognises his long-lost Leonora. The sight of the lovers' meeting arouses the fast expiring Don Carlos, and he plunges his dagger into his sister's heart. The monks, alarmed by the tolling of the hermitage bell, arrive to find the corpse of the Chevalier and the hapless Leonora, and Fra Rafael a raving maniac. He precipitates himself from the rocks, whilst the horror-stricken monks pray for heaven's mercy on the "Victims of Destiny." The work was brought out with great care and attention to stage effect. The interior of an inn with the assemblage of muleteers and other guests; and the scene of the military encampment, with its well-ordered yet apparently uncontrolled multitudes of soldiers and camp followers, were capital specimens of stage management. Very effective, too, were the scene of the church, with its adjoining convent, and the final rocky valley, with its gloom fitfully irradiated by flashes of electric light. In spite of the repulsive nature of the story, the merit of the music caused the opera to be very favourably received; and the encores were numerous. As to the execution of the music, nothing could be better. It is scarcely possible to imagine any finer performance of the parts of Leonora, Preziosilla, Don Alvaro, and Don Carlos than was realized by Mdlle. Titiens, Mme. Trebelli-Bettini, Signor Mongini, and Mr. Santley; while the subordinate characters of Curra, Trabuco, a Surgeon, and an Alcalde were generally well filled by Mdlle. Bauermeister, Mr. Hohler, Signori Foli, and Casaboni, other still smaller parts falling to Signori Manfredi and Bertucchi.—Court and Mail.

The Archbishop of York has laid before the House of Lords a bill striking a blow at peppercorn rents. It provides permission and authority for the legal surrender to the Ecclesiastical Commissioners of all rights in pews in district churches where persons are so disposed, so that in future they may be subject as pews of ancient parish churches.

PETITIONING REDUCED TO FIRST PRINCIPLES.—On Thursday evening (June 20th) as the Emperor was driving in an open carriage down the Champs Elysées, on his return from a visit to the Prince Imperial at St. Cloud, and just as he reached the Avenue Marigny, an Arab, who had been waiting on the spot for some time, started forward holding up a large envelope in his hand. The Emperor saw him and beckoned him forward, but he could not, after running for some time, overtake the carriage. Two of the gendarmes who usually patrol the avenue at that hour to keep the way clear, arrested the Arab. On a sign from the Emperor the carriage stopped, the man came forward, and deposited his petition, or whatever it was, in the Emperor's hands. He then retired, and the carriage drove on into the Tuileries. Some groups were collected on the spot, hearing that something was the matter. They dispersed when it was known that it was only a petitioner who took this mode of making his wishes known to his Majesty.—Times.

The Great French Exhibition.

(From the "Times" Special Correspondent.)

PARIS, Wednesday, June 19.

It is rather an odd thing to have to report that the Exhibition is now complete. In some few of its details, indeed, it may be still unfinished. The French complain of us as bad coordinators, and point out that the portion of the Park allotted to England does not look so pretty, nor even so tidy, as the portion allotted to France. Inside the building, too, one hears of work unfinished. "My best jewels are not yet ready," says one man. "Wait till you see some bronzes of mine that are yet to come," says another. "I am every day expecting some wonderful enamels," says a third. Practically, however, this last week may be said to have rendered the Exhibition as nearly complete as it will ever be. Almost every one of the buildings in the Park, and of the restaurants on the outer rim of the Palace, has received its last touch. The International Theatre was opened last week. The great aquarium in the garden—which has been exciting immense expectations, partly because so large an aquarium is in itself a curious sight, partly because the caverns into which the spectator will enter in order to see it from below have all the charms of a cool grotto on a broiling hot day—will be open to view to-morrow. Even the Turkish restaurant is now ready, and the Chinese and Japanese establishments look as if they would open in a day or two. The Exhibition, thus complete, begins to be inconveniently crowded. There is scarcely a day in which there are less than 40,000 or 50,000 people present. Sometimes the numbers mount up to thrice as many. And this, although the great mass of the French working population have not yet begun to find their way to the Champ de Mars. The workmen of Paris crowd into it, but not as yet those of the provinces. These will come later, when the tourists flock in, and no doubt they will form a mighty concourse. In the meantime, the Imperial Commission is very well content with Princes, Kings, and Emperors, and a small gathering of 50,000 a day. These collect chiefly in three of the concentric rings in which the show is arranged. All other parts of the Exhibition are comparatively free; but whoever would see the pictures or the machines well, and whoever dislikes to feed in a great crush, must learn to sleep early hours. After 12 o'clock there is little chance of seeing pictures or machinery with comfort. After 11 o'clock it is not easy to pick one's way along the pavement that surrounds the building. At some places the whole breadth of the pavement is taken up with the tables and chairs of people who seem to be enjoying every species of repast, and who are too numerous to find room in the adjacent restaurants. In the earlier part of the day the most crowded of the restaurants and of the adjoining pavement are those belonging to the French. After the breakfast hour, however, the French restaurants are well nigh deserted. There is a period of the day when they are absolutely empty, and then they begin to fill again as the dinner-hour approaches. The restaurants which are most constantly crowded are the Russian and American. These are constantly crowded, because if people cannot eat at all hours they are ever ready to drink. The American drinks are the most popular in the Champ de Mars; and be it remembered that these are not always alcoholic. In the restaurant of Messrs. Dawson and Gould one gets a great variety of American drinkies—solid and liquid—but their beverage which is most in request is very mild. Iced soda-water with a spoonful of iced cream added to it, and flavoured with whatever syrup may be desired—vanilla, strawberry, lemon or any other. Ladies are greatly addicted to this compound, which has the faults, however, of being a little too saccharine. Near at hand is the Russian restaurant for those who like tea. You get an infusion of the overland tea, poured into a nice little tumbler, and flavoured, in the Russian fashion, with a slice of lemon. It is a mighty question in the Exhibition whether the dusty visitor who wants some slight refreshment will turn to the right and try the iced drinks of the United States, or to the left and imbibe the hot tea of the Muscovites; and where the path divides there is a crowd of people lounging about, like the sea which is reported to have lingered long between the two bundles of hay.

Now, however, in connexion with the Exhibition one hears little, else than talk of the great doings which are to glorify the first fortnight of next month. These are to be the crowning days of the Exhibition, the most splendid of all. On Monday, the 1st of July, will be held the Fête de la Paix, as it is called in some of the French journals—that is, a magnificent festival in honour of the Exhibition, and the idea of peace which it represents. The chief event of this festival will be the awarding of the prizes to the successful competitors—an event which is to be environed with the utmost pomp of sight and sound. The ceremony will be held, not in the Champ de Mars—where, indeed, there is no room for it—but in the Palais de l'Industrie, in the Champs Elysées, which was built for the Exhibition of 1855. The great nave of this building is being prepared for the reception of about 20,000 people, every one in his place—the prize men in their places, the Kings and Emperors who do them honour in theirs, the thousands of the orchestra who will sound the trumpets of peace in theirs, and 16,000 witnesses of all this glory in their stalls. The right of admission is to be obtained only by the purchase of a season ticket, the price of which is now reduced to 60f. The Palais de l'Industrie is being magnificently decorated for this festivity, one of the chief features of the decoration being the erection of ten trophies to illustrate the ten groups of subjects into which the "exhibits" are divided. The arrangement of the ten trophies has been intrusted to ten architects (not all French), and in so far as it is possible there will be introduced into these trophies the various works to which gold medals have been awarded. They will be removed from the Champ de Mars to the Champs Elysées on the night of the 30th of June, and on the following night will be restored to their places in the Exhibition.

Then for the music. There will first of all be produced an unpublished hymn of Rossini's. This must be an extraordinary composition, for besides calling into requisition all the resources of a vast orchestra, of a great choir, and of military fanfares, it demands the accompaniment of bell-ringing and a cannonade. We are all naturally curious about this performance in honour of peace which requires, it is said, this mixture of ecclesiastical bells and warlike discharges of cannon. To the sound of this remarkable music the Sovereigns will enter the Palace—a whole troop of them. Besides the Emperor and Empress of the French there will come the Emperor and Empress of Austria, the Sultan, the King and Queen of Portugal, the King of Sweden, the Viceroy of Egypt. It is said that the British Crown will be represented by the Prince of Wales, and the Prussian by the Prince and Princess of Prussia. Among the great monarchs to be present the French newspapers are very particular in mentioning those high potentates, the Lord Mayor of London, the Lord Provost of Edinburgh, and the Lord Mayor of Dublin. Rossini's hymn will not be the only music performed on this great occasion. I told you some time ago of the music in honour of the Exhibition for which the Imperial Commission had advertised. They had first of all advertised for two pieces of poetry—a hymn in honour of peace, and a cantata in praise of the Exhibition. Having got the words, they next announced that they would award a prize to the composer who would set them best to music by the 5th day of this month of June. The result of the competition is that the judges are not satisfied with the musicians, and have declined to award a prize to any of them. The music for the cantata has been more fortunate. Two hundred competitors contended for the prize, but the judges unanimously and at the first scrutiny of votes decreed M. Camille Saint-Saens to be the most successful composer. The cantata, therefore, as set to music by Mr. Saint-Saens, will be performed on the great occasion of the 1st of July, when the prizes will be distributed.

Although at the end of the day the beautiful and useful works which have obtained gold medals, and which will appear in the midst of the ten trophies already referred to, will be removed from the Champs Elysées and returned to their places in the Champ de Mars, in other respects the decorations of the Palais de l'Industrie will remain for some three weeks, during which a remarkable series of musical performances will take place. On Thursday, the 4th of July, there will be a grand concert, under the direction of M. Georges Hainl, of the Opéra and of the Conservatoire. M. Hainl is just now engaged in the not very easy task of organizing and drilling his troops. He will have an orchestra of about 550 performers and a chorus of 500, nearly all taken from the forces of the Conservatoire, the Opéra, the Opéra Comique, the Théâtre Lyrique, and the Théâtre des Italiens. The orchestra is wonderfully complete, and the composition of it deserves record. Of the stringed instruments there are 340 executants—namely, 180 for the violin, first and second; 60 for the alto, 50 for the violoncello, and 50 for the contra-bass. Of the wood there are 60—namely, 12 for the flute, 12 for the clarionet, 12 for hautboy, and 24 for the bassoon. Of the brass there are 50—namely, 24 for the horn, 8 for the trumpet, 8 for the cornet-à-pistons, 12 for the tambour, and 4 for the ophicleide. There are 10 instruments of percussion—drums, kettledrums, cymbals, and tambours. There are 25 harps. Lastly, there is a fanfare band of 60 performers, and in addition to all there is a great organ. With this splendid orchestra, and with a not less splendid chorus at command, M. Georges Hainl will conduct the great concert of July 4.
